Nikola Tesla warned that the advent of drones will seriously undermine human safety. In a 1920 lecture, the inventor of electricity described drones as 'a very serious menace to the safety of mankind.' Tesla said that the day will surely come when in the sky are not a few unmanned aircraft but many thousands and each piloted by someone else. 'Nuanced' creature: The Unmanned Aerial Vehicle (UAV) has the potential to greatly enhance aspects of everyday life, but in the hands of those with a more malign intent, it could be just as dangerous as a weapon Drones can be used for everything from bird-spotting to delivering pizza. However, Tesla said that the unmanned craft can be just as dangerous as a conventional weapon, which have arguably not been used to cause great harm in the world. 'Unmanned aircraft can be used by people for good or for ill. 'They can be used to detect the presence of an enemy or mine it so that it detonates when brought near enough. 'They can be used to destroy it, to assist in the destruction of it and to provide perfect targets for it, which can be dropped upon. 'In a matter of days, there may be thousands or even millions of such aircraft, all perfectly guided and controlled,' Tesla said. 'Warfare will become as incredible as war itself, with both sides using these things to rain death and destruction upon one another.' Telsa pointed out that autonomous drones could be harnessed by those holding a grudge to exact a 'calculated revenge' on their enemies. While it is conceivable that the current generation of technology would be used for this purpose, he warned that the next one may prove just as dangerous. The lecture was given in March 1920 at the Columbia University and is now available online. Tesla talks about the potential dangers of drones in an era before we truly understood the enormity of what could be done with drones While drones are already used in law enforcement, and by the military to monitor borders and other things, Tesla believed that the 'battlefield' of the skies was about to become far more dangerous. 'The unmanned aircraft can be used by people for good or for ill. They can be used to detect the presence of an enemy or mine it so that it detonates when brought near enough. They can be used to destroy it, to assist in the destruction
