Republicans have said about election-year Supreme Court vacancies

Bipartisan praise pours in after Ginsburg's death Trump carries on with rally, unaware of Ginsburg's death MORE wants women in politics who are "unapologetically themselves" when they talk about their gender, in a speech on Tuesday in which she called for a greater emphasis on

"inclusiveness" within the party. ADVERTISEMENT Clinton was speaking to nearly 700 students at Columbia Law School in New York when she made the remarks. "Our message is 'Yes, we can,' " she said. "We say women can and will make their voices heard. We say that they can and will be in charge of their own destiny." "We say it with strength and dignity," she said. "We say it with courage and confidence and we say it with the truth." Hillary Clinton: "Our message is 'Yes, we can. We say women can and will make their voices heard."

In a rousing speech that was received positively by the crowd, the former secretary of State said, "I know you have heard people saying things like there are no women running for president or that women don't belong in politics." "I have to tell you, I have heard that as a woman running for president," she said. "I find it deeply troubling and part of the reason why I'm running is I am not willing to stay silent anymore."
