Five of the nine people who have been diagnosed in the county are from the Springville-Farmington School District, and one is from Taylorsville and one is from Hurricane. The confirmed case in Taylorsville is a 42-year-old man and the suspected case in Farmington is a 17-year-old girl, according to Brian Ingraham, the public health officer for Wasatch County. He said all patients in Wasatch County are now in quarantine for 14 days. Earlier today, Ingraham said he still anticipates more cases being diagnosed in the county. He said most people who become infected are not being tested for the coronavirus. Ingraham said cases of COVID-19 can be mistaken for the flu. He said the symptoms are similar. "Over time, people will see a lot of different things that could be related to COVID-19. It could be something that is bothersome," he said, "but if you're sick enough to get some kind of flu-like symptoms, it could be

COVID." If you are having symptoms such as fever, cough, difficulty breathing or shortness of breath, Ingraham recommends coming to the doctor. "Then getting a COVID-19 test," Ingraham said. The CDC is not recommending COVID-19 testing for patients with flu-like symptoms. However, if a person has traveled to a country in which the coronavirus is known to be circulating, it is recommended that they have a COVID-19 test. Ingraham said people are not being tested if they are not symptomatic. "This is sort of a new disease that is pretty new to us," he said. "People (Newseum) The 20 children and six adults shot to death at Sandy Hook Elementary School in December 2012. (Michael Revkin / The Post-Standard) Sandy Hook wasn't the largest massacre of 20 or 30 people in American history -- that was the toll at the Pentagon on Sept. 11, 2001, a day that will live in infamy as the first catastrophe of the "war on terror." But for years after the attack on the Pentagon, I heard my students say "Sandy Hook" for its universality and depth of suffering -- how unlike the first responders from the first attack that day who were killed as they arrived at the attack at the World Trade Center. Sandy Hook was the world's first "shock and awe" massacre -- a calculated terrorist attack on an innocent school in a neighborhood hundreds of miles from any of the hot spots of violence in the Middle East. The target was a relatively small, but well-protected suburban school. The terrorists were armed with nothing but semi-automatic assault weapons. The attack, as all attacks in the post-9/11 years, was planned for months and carried out with the logistical precision of a small army. It was the perfect killing machine, an invisible sword wielded by a shadowy, faceless enemy. The psychological shock of the attack was powerful and immediate, and stayed with America for years to come. It was also an attack on the heart and conscience of this nation, which led to the worst domestic political crisis since the Civil War. President George W. Bush was seen as a leader who could not lead, his presidency crumbling around
