“Our team has developed a new, completely new control scheme that really lets the players take the ball and run at the opponents,” Tobias Sippel, FIFA Producer, EA Sports, tells us. “New animations and engine technologies allowed us to more realistically show the shape of the players and reproduce the physical movements of their bodies.” Diving players using head-on tackles, leaning on opponents with their shoulders or blocking shots with their arms are all now part of the game’s physics engine, which means gamers can now experience the impact of physicality and collisions with utter realism. Running players will leap past players, impressively dodging them, and the ball will pass through players’ limbs like it’s made of rubber. Players will move and act like the real thing. HyperMotion Technology The movement of every player in this year’s game has been improved by introducing “HyperMotion Technology,” which uses motion capture data collected from 22 real-life players playing a complete, high-intensity football match in motion capture suits. The data collected from player movements, tackles, aerial duels and on-ball actions is used to power FIFA 22 gameplay. “Our team has developed a new, completely new control scheme that really lets the players take the ball and run at the opponents,” Tobias Sippel, FIFA Producer, EA Sports, tells us. “New animations and engine technologies allowed us to more realistically show the shape of the players and reproduce the physical movements of their bodies.” Diving players using head-on tackles, leaning on opponents with their shoulders or blocking shots with their arms are all now part of the game’s physics engine, which means gamers can now experience the impact of physicality and collisions with utter realism. Running players will leap past players, impressively dodging them, and the ball will pass through players’ limbs like it’s made of rubber. Players will move and act like the real thing. Head-on tackles remain a crucial part of delivering the speed and unpredictability of real football action, and this year there are a number of new animations that showcase the ball-striking power of players and players’ feet. For example, defenders are more apt to challenge attackers with flying, long-kicking tackles that will have defenders timing their run at the ball with the attacker’s run at the defender
