In the last 10 to 15 years, the molecular epidemiology of colorectal cancer (CRC) has made significant strides in providing a basic foundation for understanding the etiology of CRC. A substantial body of information has been accumulated on the mutations that lead to the development of CRC. Familial colorectal neoplasia and sporadic CRC also have recently been well characterized. A number of susceptibility loci for colorectal neoplasia have been localized to specific chromosomal regions. Studies on the epigenetic regulation of tumor suppressor genes and on the expression of noncoding RNA have also offered new insights into the pathogenesis of CRC. This article reviews these recent advances on the molecular basis of CRC, and discusses future prospects in molecular epidemiology of CRC.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an image pickup device and a method of driving the image pickup device. 2. Description of the Related Art In recent years, there has been proposed an image pickup device that can reduce operating voltage and current consumed and achieve high speed response by actively controlling lighting of a plurality of light-emitting diodes by driving a plurality of current-driven light-emitting elements according to an image signal. On the other hand, an image pickup device has been proposed in which a single power supply is shared among light-emitting elements for reading out a specific pixel from a photo-sensor and light-emitting elements for writing in the photo-sensor (see, for example, Japanese Unexamined Patent Application Publication Nos. 2010-273181 and 2012-234618). Even in the case of a configuration in which the light-emitting elements are driven with a constant current as in Japanese Unexamined Patent Application Publication Nos. 2010-273181 and 2012-234618, the lighting time period of the light-emitting elements is not constant, which leads to variations in the brightness of a subject image. In recent years, however, there has been a demand for increasing the number of pixels, and thus the total number
