Invented by KaiWaltrap, The Game Tidalis: A Browser Game. The Story: Long ago humanity discovered the secrets of fusion and war. In the aftermath of the catastrophic fusion war, humanity tried to rebuild a new world by constructing advanced defenses and high-tech cities around the island of Atlantis. A new threat would emerge again and now the new tide of people on earth began to notice odd rumblings in the oceans. Very soon, the island of Atlantis is going to sink forever. Play as two new characters: Haka the Stone Ball Player and Fly Agaric Player! An eclectic duo consisting of a human girl and a golem from the depths of the ocean, they are perfect for solving the mysteries of the sinking island! Note: Both versions of the game will have the same gameplay. Those creating recreational marijuana for the Seattle Cannabis City are soon going to have to purchase a lottery system to get a license from the state. State officials agreed Wednesday to use a lottery system when the city is awarded its license, a change from earlier proposals that would require a random lottery for recreational pot retailers. Retail sales for recreational marijuana are expected to begin in February. In addition, the state will issue one recreational license for every 20 marijuana retailers. And by selling recreational pot only to adults, the state is out of the business of issuing licenses to individuals. Huge task Barry Broome, the Seattle Cannabis City board president, said it is a huge task to develop and deliver all this pot for the nearly 25,000 recreational and medical patients in the city. Those requirements include getting the city and county to approve zoning for pot businesses and getting the state to approve the zoning. The city also needs to secure several locations for pot businesses and then get the vendors and regulators to align on how to operate the products. The Cannabis City has some work to do before recreational sales are launched next February. At a board meeting earlier this month, medical marijuana operators discussed how the city could allow them to begin operating on day one of recreational sales. Broome said the city should be able to make a significant impact on the early days of recreational sales. He hopes that the city will be the first place people buy recreational pot, rather than driving to Portland or Bellevue. "We're just kind of going to be the test bed for it," Broome said. New Bard Archetype: Celt-Arcane
Five new Bard jobs for 6th Edition D&D
Reskinned Bard for Age of Worms

Product Description

In the Age of Worms Bard can summon the dead to aid them on the battlefield, preparing the ghosts to move one ahead of the players and reacting to situations where well-timed magic could put the players into a disadvantageous situation.

Using either of the five new Bard jobs, as well as empowering them with Classic or Bardic Arcane, Bards are able to summon the spirits of once-living creatures to aid them on the battlefield. The new Bard archetype also provides a celtic twist to the Bard Arcane, changing it from the normal 3 spells into 6, each of which has a specific context. A sorcerer with the Bard Arcane can cast, for example, Necromancy to create a spectral clone that he can use in the game, thus freeing up his own spells for other actions.

The Bards have no specific D&D subclass, but as a bonus player class they can choose from the Other Subclasses bonus allowing them to equip bonuses from both D&D classes, or any combination.
