Ultra-Orthodox Jewish men celebrate after getting drunk during the Jewish holiday of Purim in Mea Shearim ultra-Orthodox neighborhood inÂ .Links and Lists Saturday, August 24, 2015 Alistair Horne has spent fifty years covering the epic events of the twentieth century, from the ascent of Adolf Hitler in Germany to the fall of the Berlin Wall, from World War Two to the collapse of the Soviet Union and from the end of the Cold War to the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. His new book, Showdown, published this week, charts the creation of the Cold War, the superpowers' strategy for victory and the development of the nuclear weapons which changed the world. He talks to BBC Books editor Ben Moore about his new book, the significance of the cold war, and what it might mean for the twenty first century. Hormone Therapy for Depression: Estrogen and Progesterone to Support the Brain? by Andrew Storkey, Commissioned by the Neuroimaging Research Team of the Psychology and Psychiatry Branch, NIMH. This review is to inform, as a preliminary enquiry on the effectiveness of hormone replacement therapy (HRT) for depression, and to inquire the association between brain structure and cognition and depression. It is hypothesised that a common sub-type of depression, which co-morbidity exists with, is a neuroendocrine dysfunction. HRT could be helpful to treat this dysfunction (i.e. neuroendocrine dysfunction). We review previous work to see if there is consistent evidence of effectiveness for HRT as an intervention for depression. There is no consistent evidence for effectiveness for HRT for depression, despite investigation of several neuroendocrine hypotheses (endorphin deficiency, monoamine deficiency, gamma-aminobutyric acid (GABA) deficiency) leading to a change in brain structure, cognition or psychopathology. What are we to make of these results? The lack of evidence is not due to poor experimental design and methodology. Two of the 13 studies of HRT for depression which showed evidence of effectiveness had a high risk of bias. We can conclude that we do not yet know if depression is associated with a neuroendocrine dysfunction, but if it is, HRT cannot be recommended for the treatment of depression.
