Honda Center Offers Accessibility Services Aug. 21, 2008 Los Angeles, California (August 21, 2008) – For the fifth straight year, Honda Center will offer enhanced accessibility services for the disabled fan who attends events at the Staples Center. The Honda Center’s new team of accessibility associates will provide wheelchair seating, portable audio equipment and translation services for the deaf, hard of hearing and visually impaired. Both the audio system and the translation will be available for all events and time periods, and visitors will need to provide a photo ID in order to receive their tickets. Last year, Honda Center had six accessibility associates. This year, they have 12. In addition to providing the above services, they will also assist visitors with all wheelchair, stroller and mobility equipment rentals. All Honda Center restrooms are accessible to disabled visitors with the requisite handicap placard. The future of Jewish life is in the hands of the American people. And most people don't like what they see. As Jews, we understand well the concept of the parable: the fear of a neighbor to keep his life or property. In thinking about the complex question of how and what we should support, it is essential to first understand the parable in context. The parable assumes a basic, if not simplistic, view of the human condition: that people are essentially good or bad, sinful or righteous, and the world is made up of two groups. Obviously, like any good parable, the story has parts we don't understand. There may be a moment of darkness before the light of God is revealed in our lives, or we may have been misled into believing wrong. The parable of the Good Samaritan doesn't say whether the man who took care of the Jew was a good person, a bad person or not quite human. The parable doesn't even tell us whether the man who took care of the Jew was or was not a Jew. The parable assumes that God is good and has a plan for each of us to learn a lesson or two about love and caring. This may seem like a very simplistic way of approaching the question of how one should respond to people who are outside the e79caf774b

YouTube - Aug 05 .Q: How to get latest records in Eloquent I have two tables: Data RecentData Data contains one field with the data id. I need to get the data id for the latest entry in RecentData. I used this query `$latestData = RecentData::latest()->first();` to get the latest entry but then I have an error Trying to get property 'myField' of non-object Is there any other way to do this without using raw sql? A: Query Builder has a latest() method on QueryBuilder:

`$latestData = RecentData::latest() ->first();`
