Reply: Benito.Q: What is a good communication medium for an Earth-like planet? I'd like to ask this from a different view point. Normally I'm intersted in biological and machine-based answers. Maybe a very naive one, but what if the technology is different in this planet. What would be the best medium for communication? I mean we use radio waves for communication, but what if it's different? I can only think of simple crystal-like one. But that's very basic. A: Assuming that the planet doesn't have a particularly high density of intelligent life, the most promising method of communication is probably going to be terraforming. Depending on how many planets in the system there are, both on terraformed worlds and un-terraformed worlds, this could be a good or bad thing. On an un-terraformed world, this would be great as you wouldn't have to worry about the lay of the land in order to make a signal as long as you know what you're sending and where. On a terraformed world, the planet may have stabilized already, and there may not be enough space to blast a signal the whole way. Or the terraformed world may have stabilized, and there may be any number of reasons (now that there is food, for example) why a biologist wouldn't want to blast a signal through to say "Hi I'm from planet X, this is my home planet". The best bet for you would probably be to find the planets that have done all of these things already, such as Kepler 452b, where the planet is becoming terraformed.
