so, to bypass that step, we can use microsofts latest fully-signed preactivation tool for windows 7, as an unattended preactivation tool. windows 7 x64 professional already has sp1 installed, and the required settings exist for windows 7 to fully bypass activation and skip that step. i did not have a windows 7 x64 media center dvd for this install. note that this method should not be used when the system is to be installed on an end-user's pc. the system should not become an unofficial test system for the purpose of bypassing activation. the reason is that registry keys are created that allow microsoft to tie any data from the oem to the user, allowing microsoft to see what has happened, or will happen, on that system, if windows 7 is found to be a compatible product. during the installation, windows 7 will prompt to perform an unattended activation, to provide access to certain new features and functions, such as bitlocker, which use a network connection to unlock the drive. the wording on the screen is very clear and easy to understand. but be careful, as an unattended installation does not mean the installation goes without detection! the system must be configured properly for the windows installation to be successful, meaning that no additional drivers or services are installed, and the installation is not rebooted. this method is designed to be used where you have an identical lenovo thinkpad or dell system that you wish to install windows on. its designed to work with an unattended install, which usually deals with servers and services. however, there are times when users have a desire to install an os on a system with the intent of using it on a permanent basis and this installs the typical windows os into a system that they can use.

to perform this transfer, plug the usb drive into your system, pop in the install usb and run it (unattended install). once the install completes, navigate to recoverdrive and if you have the 1.5 version, use the "transfer" option to transfer the drive to another system. when you get to the "recover" tab, hit the "linux" option, and your drive will be mounted. if not, try copying the drive to the same location and then mounting the copied drive. if it still doesnt work, sometimes the "view the device's details" option at the top of the drive can help. to finish the install, you can hit the finish button, or look at recoverdrive again and look for the "install to legacy boot" option. you can also hit the button at the top right (icons only), and select either "install.." or "repair." you can also use the "shift" and "windows" keys while clicking that button to make the same selection.

once you have booted, you will be automatically taken to the windows setup wizard, which will walk you through the install. you will have the option to keep the os language us english or change it to uk english. here you can configure how the system boots. here i chose to have windows and the multi-boot loader be installed to the same disk, but it could be installed to either drive. you also have the option to create a new partition or shrink an existing one. during the installation, an additional 8gb of the 30gb partition is reserved for a recovery partition that can be used to reinstall the os. before the os is installed, you have the option to install certain windows apps that will enhance or optimize the os. for example, the windows phone app is something that would typically be installed, and will allow windows phone users to download and use applications. other things you can install are the amd gaming evolved app and
