A major challenge to the efficient use of online advertising is the difficulty in selecting target web pages that are relevant to the interests of a user. A key problem in the collection of information to identify a user's interests is that the information is usually limited to information that has been explicitly provided by the user and does not include information that is implicitly available about the user, such as usage patterns of certain information resources. As a result, many web pages that are accessible to users are not of interest to advertisers and, conversely, some sites that are of interest to an advertiser will not be easily accessible to the advertiser. There are several existing methods that attempt to solve the problem of selecting appropriate web pages for advertising. Two of the more popular methods of selecting web pages for advertising are: (1) to use search engines, such as Yahoo™, Google™, and MSN™, to search the World Wide Web for pages that contain some of the words that the advertiser has selected keymacro is a replacement for the Windows KeyMACRO utility. The purpose of this application is to provide all of the features of KeyMACRO (most notably the keycodes) but with the added ability to be ported to Mac OS X and Linux. This is a beta version of keymacro for OS X, it will work but may not have all the features. Keymacro provides an alternative way to configure the keyboard for your environment. Instead of needing to re-enter keycodes on every computer you use, you can now configure the keyboard directly from within the application. You can also use keymacro to program in keycodes you want to assign to a single key. I have included a few features that make keymacro more useful for those of us who are unable to use the function keys on their keyboard (such as myself). Some keycodes have been placed on the Special keys that will not conflict with the system's function keys. Synchronizing is provided with the Windows version of keymacro, but is only supported with the Windows XP and later versions. OS X users will need to manually add and remove key codes on your computer. Some of the configuration features of keymacro are still to be completed. The most important of these features include the ability to set the key codes for each of the keys and the ability to assign the keys on different computer keyboards to the same keycode. What is new in this version: Fixed a bug that caused the application to crash when no keyboard was available. Fixed a bug that caused the application to freeze when using a Windows laptop keyboard connected to the Mac. Added an About button that will display a copy of the source code. Many bug fixes. Reviews SmartiShooter - 11/09/2008 I have just started using this app on my iMac and it works well - keeps the needle within the symbol. You simply tap the symbol with the musical staves on the app screen and the needle adjusts accordingly. It might be worth a try, certainly useful for other keyboard users. (I have tried the other SmartiShotgun, don't know what happened 2edc1e01e8
